NIL and the Business of College Sports

Please welcome guest speaker Brandon Leopoldus of Leopoldus Law, APC, for his discussion, "NIL and the Business of College Sports."
College athletes are now signing deals worth anywhere from a few thousand dollars to several million, yet many of these contracts are year-to-year, rarely guaranteed, and include clawback provisions that can come into play when an athlete transfers. Brandon will explore the claims athletes are bringing against the NCAA across the country, the structure of NIL agreements between athletes and universities, collectives, and third parties, and what proposed federal legislation could mean for the future of college sports. He will also share what business managers should look for when reviewing these agreements and before their clients sign on the dotted line.

Speakers:

Brandon Leopoldus is a former professional baseball umpire turned sports attorney based in Los Angeles. After officiating more than 600 professional games, including a championship series, he transitioned to sports law, where he now represents athletes, sports officials, agencies, franchises, and players' unions. Brandon has twice served as Interim General Counsel for an MLS club, worked with hundreds of athletes, and serves on the Board of Directors of the Sports Lawyers Association. He is also an adjunct professor of Sports Law at Loyola Law School in Los Angeles. Currently, he is litigating breach-of-contract claims against the NCAA on behalf of Division I athletes seeking a fifth year of eligibility and has secured preliminary injunctions allowing those athletes to continue competing this season.
